MARKET DOMINATED

AMERICAN CAN WEEK'S

MAIN MARKET FACTOR

BY SPOT SITUATION

New York, February 2.—The cotton markets have been quiet throughout the week, with little change of importance in prices for either spots generally or futures either way. There have been too many uncertainties in the general situation to stimulate bullish activity to any extent on the contract markets, and spinners on this side, as well as in Europe, are so well stocked up with supplies of raw cotton to meet their requirements running well into the summer, that, apparently, few have felt inclined to increase such supplies under existing conditions at current prices.

New Oriegns, February 2.—It is very probable that the spot situation will dominate the cotton market this week. Nearly all other factors have lost in importance recently, and the question of the demand for, and supply of, actual cotton has assumed greater importance than at any previous time this seeson.

Opinion is fairly well divided on this question, which the developments of this coming week ought to settle to some extent. The bears are confident that the near future will show that holders of spots in the South are getting tired, whereas, on the other hand, spinners and spot houses generally are well covered, and are willing to hold off for awhile from buying their requirements for the remainder of this season are already fairly well surplied, and that under no circumstances can a very active or very strong spot.

Newbern, N. C. February 2.—That some of the white women in parts of evidenced by the fact that on last Friday United States Deputy Marshal license. The woman was taken before
